Experts from Radical Hospitality about the Subiaco Retreat Center:

“The retreat house at St. Benedict’s was designed with teenagers in mind. The monks architect, and workers kept this goal carefully in sight. It was built to be a shelter for teens, and it was meant to be the kind of shelter they would remember for the rest of their lives.”

“At St. Benedict Monastery the monks have built a chapel that, regardless of how often you go there, has the power to steal your breath and startle your eyes and move your soul.”

“The monastery feeds dozens of teenagers almost every weekend during the school year. Brother Antony is the one who sets the tables. Besides being a monk, Antony is an artist. If you watch him setting the tables in the retreat house you will probably guess he is an artist, even if you have never seen his studio. He prepares the tables for the teens with a sense of reverence that is obvious and humbling. He is setting the places for pizza and soda, but he does so with the same care he uses when he prepares the table for the Eucharist.”

Subiaco Retreat

“The 1975 opening of the monastery to teenagers has affected more lives than can possibly be numbered. When the teenagers walk into Subiaco and look around at the expansive, warm, and beautiful retreat house, they often respond with, ‘Wow, I can’t believe this is all for us!’ You should see their faces when it dawns on them that monks are scrubbing their toilets and showers.”
